I am not really getting any news now so this Lockdown News is brief and probably the last one for now.

Jean and Janet the Jigsaw Whizz Kids!!

Another Joke from Richard

A young lad goes off to University and after a while moves into a flat with a roommate.

His Mother comes to visit one day for Sunday dinner, and is shocked to find that the roommate is not another bloke, but a young, stunningly beautiful woman. The son assures her though that despite that, they're just friends. Barely that in fact - they get along, share the rent and chores and study. During dinner, Mother admires an item the lad has picked up for the kitchen: a lovely antique serving ladle - silver, with charming decorations. The young man explains he picked it up in an antique store because it reminded him of home.

Well, dinner was a great success and Mother went home, satisfied. After a while though, the lad realized he could not find the ladle anywhere. Not in the kitchen, not in the dining room. He was aghast - his own mother stole from him?

He sent a note to his mum, not actually accusing her but inquiring as to where the ladle went. The note ended:

"I'm not saying you took it and I'm not saying you didn't, but if it was to be returned nothing more would be said."

Mother's return note was prompt:

"I'm not saying you are sleeping with her and I'm not saying you're not, but if she was sleeping in her own bed, she'd have found the ladle."
